Hypoxia is an important microenvironmental cue for maintaining the undifferentiated state of stem cells, and by contrast, it is also a major factor in regulating the differentiation of stem cells. Mesenchymal stem cells (MSCs) can be readily differentiated into neural cells when cultured under appropriate conditions. Recent studies have suggested that hypoxia-induced MSC differentiation is accompanied by autophagy. However, the role of autophagy in MSC-induced neural differentiation has not been explored. Our results show that hypoxia could induce autophagy in cultured mouse MSCs and that autophagy inhibitor 3-methyl adenine (3-MA) could hinder the differentiation of MSCs into neuronal and glial cells. Moreover, hypoxia-activated autophagy (HAA) with 3-MA could enhance the expression of nestin and β -tubulin III. This provides new insights into the potential role of autophagy in MSC-induced neural differentiation, and suggests that HAA with autophagy inhibition may be a novel strategy for the differentiation of MSCs into neural cells.Q: Android Studio 1.5, gradle doesn't install my dependencies I've created app, and I wanted to create a project from existing one.
